Huu-ay-aht Community Celebrates Abundant Clam Harvest at Sarita Bay

A recent low tide brought the Huu-ay-aht First Nations community and the Lands and Resources team together for a successful clam harvest on the Southeast side of Santa Maria Island. The event occurred on a traditional food beach, stewarded by the Huu-ay-aht Warrior's youth program.

The beach was teeming with clams, producing abundant and efficient harvests. The gathering highlighted the value of shared community effort, cultural practice, and the ecological care provided by the Warrior program.

The ongoing stewardship of this area has strengthened its environmental health while emphasizing the importance of traditional food sources. Events like this continue to showcase the deep connection between people, land, and tradition and underscore the critical role of Indigenous youth in environmental leadership.
